GRAHAM WEBBER
ROI IEA

Graham Webber was born in North Essex in 1980 and is a member of the ROI and the IEA.

"Just before lockdown began I was writing a series of articles for The Artist magazine on the practice of developing work from plein air painting, progressing through to larger studio work. Gathering enough information out in the field to work from in the studio is a big part of my process and when lockdown was introduced it gave me an opportunity to develop some of these ideas further in a new body of work focussing on atmosphere and place.

Using past subject matter gathered over the last year became more poignant as lockdown began. I have a strong connection to the landscape, spending a lot of my time in the field sketching and painting. Distilling the subject matter, conveying light and space to create a feeling of atmosphere is my main focus. I work using subtle changes in colour and tone to try to simplify the subject. Working in the studio has allowed me to concentrate on emotion and creativity to recapture my initial experience. The work has a greater emphasis on the feeling and memory of the subject. It has made me even more appreciative of the freedoms we have to explore our landscape and how much more there is to experience.

I think my work has become more personal because of this and represents what sparks my enthusiasm and evokes inspiration for me as a landscape painter.

This current body of work is close to my heart. It includes smaller plein air pieces, some of which have developed into larger work as well as paintings made using reference such as sketches and paintings back in the studio. There are places I have been and long to go again soon as well as atmospheres and communities I recall with fondness. The paintings trigger emotions and memories for me and I hope that they will do the same for those who view them".
